

Introduction

Miami is the home of the Pan American International Flight Academy. We see the sister's resilience and ability to think on their feet as they overcome training disasters with humor and creative resourcefulness. Linda graduates first and finds herself flying to Central and South America where she is pursued by powerful, wealthy men. Paula, the billboard image for Pan Am, struggles with classmate jealousies. She falls for Curt Mitchell, a New Zealand service rep, one of six men being trained at the academy for future positions as Pan Am executives.

New York is where the sisters share their first apartment and where Paula alters their flight schedules through an unexpected friendship with the head of scheduling. Suddenly they are on the fast-track, crowded with predatory men and temptations they never knew existed. Can they hang on to their traditional values and still like themselves at the end of the day? As they travel into dangerous countries, engage in complex romances, they find the only thing they can truly count on is each other. Their special bond becomes life sustaining, and the uniqueness of their generation provides the endless surprises, excitement and challenges that created this unforgettable story. Pan Am Sisters makes us nostalgic about a time when life was simpler, when pilots were "Sky Gods," and stewardesses were "First Ladies of the Air."
